RESEARCH STATEMENT

I specialize in philosophy of mind, philosophy of cognitive science and philosophical psychology. The overarching questions of my research are these: how do our brains, our bodies and the artifactual, cultural and social environment in which we live shape our cognitive and affective processes? How does our interaction with different kinds of objects and features of the environment influence the quality of our conscious experiences (memory, imagination, perception, emotion, etc.)? Combining methods in analytic philosophy and empirically informed philosophy of mind, I used these questions as a guide to investigate three key themes:

- the nature of our contact with the environment and the active role of the environment in perception and action;
- the role of material objects in affective processes, in particular emotion regulation;
- the interplay of neural, bodily and environmental resources in remembering and forgetting.

Currently, I am building on the results of this research to investigate:

- how active and controllable forms of forgetting can contribute to one's psychological wellbeing thanks to their situated and embodied aspects;
- the types of experiences afforded by absent objects in perception and memory;
- the role of expressive properties of objects in emotion regulation.
